The Worman House is a two--story brick, side gable dwelling, dated to 1870 by the Frederick County Landmarks Foundation. A substantial ell, extending from the rear, or east side of the main block, telescopes in two stepped down sections, and has a double range of porches on the south side sheltered by integral roofs. Outbuildings, dating to ca. 1890, include a small frame barn used as a garage, a frame shed, and a frame garden shed plus an open-sided frame garden shed. All have vertical board and batten siding with standing seam metal roofs. At some distance south of the house is the unoccupied and largely ruinous log outbuilding, possibly dating to 1840, which is believed by local residents to have been a slave house on the Worman farm. The Worman farm was established by 1820 by Moses Worman, who operated a grist mill, no longer extant, near the present intersection of MD 26 and Worman's Mill Road. It is located in the decimated village of Harmony Grove that was bifurcated by the construction of the US 15 in the 1970's. Additional buildings that have been destroyed since then include the railroad station, post office, and freight warehouse, and two stores.

The Worman House has excellent integrity and significant architectural distinction, thus meet the requirements of Criterion C. In addition, it conveys a tangible connection with the agrarian history of American life, thus meeting the requirements of Criterion B through it connection, on a local level, with significant patterns of history, and Criterion A for its link with a local person who achieved appreciable status in the community. In conclusion, the Worman House has significant associations with important persons and events and thus qualifies for listing in the National Register of Historic Places.
